An auxiliary airfield approximately 2,000 meters long and 800 meters wide is located between the village of Belo Brdo and the Drava River. It is connected with nearby Osijek and Sombor. Only light aircraft can land on the runway, which is of soft earth which has not been rolled. There are no buildings on the field. During 1949, a Yugoslav Air Force company was stationed at the field and light planes landed there for training purposes, but at present no personnel are stationed there.
